Two Mac officers returned fire in standoff

'No connection drawn' to earlier incidents

By PAUL DAQUILANTE Of the News-Register

Two McMinnville Police officers returned fire Saturday as Dillan Cashman allegedly fired about 200 rounds from multiple weapons of varying calibers during a three-hour standoff in west McMinnville.

The officers, who are not being identified at this time, have been placed on paid administrative leave, according to Yamhill County Sheriff's Sgt. Sam Elliott.

The number of rounds discharged by the officers has been preliminarily determined, according to Elliott, but the incident continues to be investigated so that information is not being released at this time.

Court documents revealed that Cashman admitted to possessing the firearms and firing 10 weapons of varying calibers during the incident at a home in the 100 block of Southwest Mt. Mazama Street.

"I know more than 10 were seized from the home," Elliott said. "I don't know how many were actually used during the incident, as that will be revealed through the investigation."

Commissioners end term limits for other officials

By NICOLE MONTESANO Of the News-Register

Without further discussion, Yamhill County Commissioners on Thursday voted unanimously to end term limits for their fellow elected officials: County clerk, assessor, treasurer and sheriff.

They kept the limits in place for themselves.

The request was brought to them earlier this year by County Assessor Derrick Wharff, and has been discussed several times. It was supported by Treasurer Kris Bledsoe, Sheriff Tim Svenson and former Clerk Brian Van Bergen. Van Bergen, who was in his third term in office, has since resigned to work for the Marion County clerk's office. They argued that their jobs require specialized knowledge the county should not have to lose because of term limits.

However, during his last presentation to the county commissioners, Van Bergen told them that his office is set up

Mac city council addresses river quality

The News-Register staff

McMinnville Council will address the city's role in regional river water quality in a work session at 5:30 p.m. Tuesday, Aug. 9.

The city is required to come up with what is known as a Total Maximum Daily Load (TMDL) Implementation Plan by Dec. 31.

As high levels of mercury have been found in the waters of the Willamette Basin, in 2021 the city was ordered by the state Department of Environmental Quality, under the federal Clean Water Act, to create a TMDL plan.

Formally, the city had been listed as a designated agency by DEQ. These measures are established to address McMinnville's contributions of runoff to local waterways including the South Yamhill River. The overall goal of the program is to reduce mercury entering the rivers.

City public works has taken the lead on this project and a draft plan has been developed by E&S Consulting. The plan is posted on the city's website and is set up to take comments from the public. The plan has been reviewed in draft form by DEQ and meets the requirements set forth by state law, according to a staff report from city manager Jeff Towery.

No public comment will be allowed at the Aug. 9 work session, The next step is review by the city council in order to meet DEQ's deadline for formal submission of the plan, Sept. 3. The plan will also undergo review and update every five years, according to Towery. If water quality improves significantly, the plan would be closed, but the city should consider this a permanent, longterm program, according to Towery.

Following the work session, the 7 p.m. regular meeting agenda has one action item, a public hearing on an ordinance to vacate an alley between Seventh and Eighth streets, bounded by Alpine and Lafayette avenues. The request comes from VVC Investment Fund, LLC, Kevin Kump and Sairita Springer, managers. According to the application, the intention is "to improve the back portion for their property with new fencing, landscaping and off-street parking for this property and the adjacent property at 910 N.E. Alpine Ave., to avoid vehicle congestion."

The council meets in person at Kent Taylor Civic Center, Northeast Second and Baker streets, or via Zoom; visit mcminnvilleoregon.gov/ government for Zoom access details.

Sarah Baxter of Amity is intrigued by the bobbin lace making technique Sheridan's Joyce Clow was working on at the Yamhill County Fair Wednesday morning. Clow said one of the reasons she enjoys coming to the fair is talking to all the people who find bobbin lace interesting.

she attempted to teach lace making to, proved to be the exception.

"She's 90. I wasn't patient teaching her," Clow said.

She explained that bobbin lace making is a weave. You're weaving threads, she said. "You cross and twist (the bobbins) and it comes out lace."

She's a regular Yamhill County Fair attendee, and provides just one example of educational activities and demonstrations available at the fair, through Saturday.

Clow and fellow Portland Lace Society members enjoy the county fair atmosphere and also make yearly Oregon State Fair appearances, too. In a fair setting, many people take the opportunity to view lace making for the first time ever. Clow said those who have an interest in learning are intrigued by the craft.

The technique is the result of braiding and twisting lengths of thread wound on bobbins, explains The Craft Atlas.

As work on a piece progresses, weaving is held in place with pins set in a lace pillow. A pattern or pricking pinned on the pillow determines the placement of those pins.

"It originated in the 15th century," Clow said. "My grandmother taught me when I was 11. I've been doing it a few years."

Long enough that she's a member of the Portland Lace Society, of which there are about 50 members, several of whom reside in Yamhill County. The group is always looking for new members.

YAMHILL COUNTY FAIR

Getting the band back

Formed in Mac in the '80s, Reckless Abandon returns for fair performance

By STARLA POINTER Of the News-Register

Nearly 40 years after they first got together, members of the popular McMinnville band Reckless Abandon will reunite Saturday for a performance at the Yamhill County Fair and Rodeo.

"We hope to trigger some memories from the '80s and a lot of nostalgia," said Andy Hunt, who founded the kernel of Reckless Abandon in his McMinnville garage in 1983.

The band will play at 4:30 p.m. on the Nyberg-Cruikshank Stage, opening a marathon of music that also will feature the Willaminabased Boondock Boys at 7:30 p.m. on the Main Stage and nationally known rock band Night Ranger at 9 p.m.

The music and other entertainment are included with daily fair admission, which is $12 for adults and $6 for children; those under 12 are admitted free before 3 p.m.

"We're sort of opening for Night Ranger," Hunt said happily.

A Mac High and Linfield graduate, he plays lead guitar and sings. He wrote many of the band's original songs,

"It's exciting to think we're worthy of being paid as pros," he said, although, admittedly, the salary doesn't really cover their travel costs.

Andy and his brother, bassist and singer Chris Hunt, another Mac High and Linfield alum, were original members of what was originally called the Hi Tops. Mac High friend Pete Adamy was the Hi Tops' drummer.

They changed the name after adding new drummer Bob Johnson, also a Mac High and Linfield grad. They chose a phrase that described their playing style: Reckless Abandon.

Another friend from high school, Jon Sherwood, replaced Chris Hunt when he was studying abroad for a semester. Hunt recalled doing a show with Sherwood in Linfield's Fireside Room that was simulcast on college radio station KSLC.

"The radio play caught the attention of Dan Thompson, who booked us at Cedars,' a bar located in the south part of McMinnville near the 99W/Highway 18 Y," Andy said. "Cedars Inn was the place in McMinnville for live music.'

The crowd responded well to their first performance, he said, and Thompson who would later become the band's manager — offered more bookings. But he also encouraged them to "step it up," Andy said, by adding a female singer.

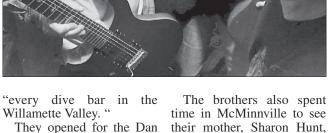

Bob's sister, Karen Johnson, filled the bill.

"When we added Karen, that's when things really took off," Andy recalled, implying that her beauty, as well as her vocal skills and saxophone playing, attracted more fans. Later, guitarist Rick

Langlitz also joined the band as its popularity grew. 1987, Reckless Abandon was a regular on the music scene in McMinnville. They played frequently at Linfield and Cedars Inn, as well as at clubs in Sherwood and Independence, and Despite their success, they decided to go their separate ways that year. Their lives diverged and they moved to different states.

Andy earned a master's joined the U.S. public health service; he's now retired. Bob worked for Hewlett-Packard for 20 years and now is with another company. Chris was in the auto industry.

Karen went on to pursue her acting and modeling career; she has appeared in music videos, worked as a spokesperson for Landmark Ford and sang with country and American bands. At the Yamhill County Fair, she also will perform with BK Miller at 1 p.m. Saturday.

"None of us lost the passion for music or fell out of touch," Hunt said.

The four core members have played in public only a couple times since. Once was the 2017 cruising event in downtown McMinnville with Bob's daughter, Emily, as the singer; another was a concert at Linfield in 1996. But they've gotten together several times to rehearse since committing to the Aug. 6 fair performance. They've met at Bob Johnson's home in Southern Washington, where all their old equipment is stored. Karen Johnson-Miller also lives in Washington; the Hunt brothers have flown in from Andy's home in Maryland and Chris's place in Florida.

That's what made the prospect of their Yamhill County Fair gig so exciting.

'Getting together to rehearse has been a blast," Hunt said. "It's fun to get together, remember old things and learn new stuff."

In the '80s, they considered themselves a party band, Hunt said. Their motto was "Party with Reckless

They always tried to 'party with a conscience," though, he said. They played meaningful songs, including tunes he'd written about injustice or concerns about nuclear war. And they eschewed drugs or alcohol.

"We were about the music," he said.

They're pleased that their music isn't dated, he said. In fact, it has taken on more meaning as they've grown older.

"Back then we thought it was just fun," he said. Now, "we can revisit it with more experience and a new perspective — and we're still proud."

OBITUARIES

KARLA SANDERS 1952 - 2021

Karla Jane Sanders passed peacefully from this world at home on December 8, 2021, following a seven-year battle with cancer. She was born May 29, 1952, in Medford, Oregon, to Jack and Sally Sanders (née Tams).

Karla grew up in Medford, except for two years of high school in the Philippines while her dad worked for the U.S. State Department during the Vietnam War.

Upon returning to the States, she graduated from Crater High School in Central Point, Oregon. After high school, she attended college in pursuit of a veterinary degree. Unfortunately, Karla didn't accomplish her plans to become a veterinarian, but her love of animals never diminished. She lived in Roseburg, Oregon, throughout the late '70s to '90s while raising her son, and relocated to the Salem, Oregon, area in 1990 to complete a B.A. degree at George Fox University in personnel management. While studying, she worked at the Oregon State Employment Office and the Oregon Department of Agriculture. Karla worked part-time for Polk and Multnomah counties Soil and Water Conservation Districts in retirement.

Retirement also allowed Karla to follow her true love of animals, and she started Valley Dog Sports. Valley Dog Sports is best known for its Barn Hunt classes, workshops and trials. It also included activities such as treibball, nose work, agility and flyball. Valley Dog Sports was nationally known, and people from all over the U.S. attended Karla's training sessions and competitions. In addition to teaching classes, Karla was a popular Barn Hunt judge who traveled all over the west coast. Her other hobbies included raising llamas for the fiber to weave and spin, beekeeping and raising ducks and chickens to sell eggs.

She was a passionate supporter of the environment, wildlife and women's rights. For relaxation, her personal favorites were walking with her dogs, trips to the beach, and enjoying the "beautiful sky" pictured in sunrises and sunsets with a glass of her favorite wine.

Karla is remembered by her family members, friends, associates, coworkers and the dog community for her supportive attitude; her willingness to answer questions for anyone who needed help was well known. She was a strong-minded and independent woman who "always had a smile on her face and was easy to talk to" and encompassed a "can do" attitude. She will be missed by all who had the pleasure of knowing her. Karla was special and meant so much to so many people for all who knew her. They will never forget how generously she reached out to others; her love for and knowledge of dogs was amazing. She especially loved teaching Barn Hunt 101 classes, as they allowed her to welcome and encourage so many people to the sport. She may be gone, but she has left behind a legacy of individuals she welcomed to the world of Barn Hunt.

Karla is survived by her husband, Kenneth Clow; her son and daughter-in-law, Matthew and Danielle Golden; stepchildren, Kelle Hildebrandt and Craig Clow; and three step-grandchildren.

A celebration of life is being planned for Karla from 3 to 6 p.m. this Sunday, August 7. If you plan on attending, please email valleydogpractice@gmail.com. Location: Bella Vista, 15730 S.W. Pleasant Hill Rd., Sherwood OR 97140. At Karla's request, instead of flowers, she recommends

GARY A. MAY 1949 - 2022

A celebration of Life for Gary A. May will be held at 6 p.m. Saturday, August 13, 2022, at De Ponte Cellars, 17545 N.E. Archery Summit Road, Dayton. Light refreshments will be served as we come together to celebrate Gary.

GORDON W. (TIM) LINTON 1933 - 2022

Gordon W. "Tim" Linton was born in Willamina, Oregon, to George (Dewey) and Geraldine (Toots Mercier) Linton. He grew up in Grand Ronde surrounded by sister, Diane, and brother, Tommy. His best friends were his many cousins, making life-long relationships.

In the late 1950s, Tim moved his growing family to Brookings, Oregon, looking for work. Always a hard worker, Tim worked in the local plywood mill as a logger and truck driver. As a truck driver, Tim found his calling, excelling as a truck boss. During this time, he received many awards for safe driving and taught others his skills.

He enjoyed hunting and camping with his boys, family and friends.

Upon retirement, he and wife, Caroline, relocated to McMinnville, Oregon. These were the happiest years for them, socializing with family and friends.

Tim was preceded in death by his wife, Caroline; and sons, Mike and Gregg. He is survived by his brother, Tom; son, Les; and daughter, Christine; as well as numerous grandchildren, great-grandchildren, nieces and nephews.

Placement of his ashes will be at 11 a.m. August 12, for family at the Grand Ronde Cemetery. A celebration of Tim's life will be held at 2 p.m. August 13, at the home of Tom Linton, 54005 S.W. Hebo Road, Grand Ronde. All family and friends are invited.

JERRY SHERWOOD

1927 - 2022

Longtime McMinnville resident Jerry Sherwood passed away August 3, 2022. A reception will be held at 3 p.m. September 10, at Macy & Son Funeral Home.

Psilocybin

So far, the cities of Sheridan, Carlton, Newberg and McMinnville have voted to send a measure to voters. Newberg is asking if voters want to approve an outright, permanent ban; McMinnville, Carlton and Sheridan are seeking a two-year moratorium. The Lafayette City Council was scheduled to vote Thursday evening on sending a measure to voters seeking a two-year moratorium.

The Yamhill County Commissioners are still debating what they will do, and have scheduled a public hearing for Aug. 11, at 10 a.m. The public may participate in person or by Zoom. More information is available on the county website: www.co.yamhill. or.us/meetings.

Thursday, On commissioners held the first reading for two different ballot measures. One would create a two year moratorium, and the other an outright ban. The outright ban option was included at the request of Commissioner Mary Starrett, but not favored by commissioners Casey Kulla or Lindsay Berschauer. Kulla argues that the county can simply impose conditions on any proposed treatment centers, just as it does on tasting rooms, bed and breakfast facilities and other land use applications, in response to concerns raised by neighbors.

Commissioners will hold a second reading of both measures on Aug. 18, and decide at that time which, if either, to put on the ballot.

Psilocybin is a chemical that occurs in many types of fungi. It can produce hallucinations and other changes in perception, affecting the user's thoughts and mood. In the 1950s, the psilocybin LSD was used for psychological torture of federal prison inmates, many of them Black, and enemy detainees, by CIA chemist Sidney Gottlieb in an unsuccessful quest to develop a form of mind control. Psilocybins and other psychedelic drugs have a long history of use in religious and spiritual ceremonies in numerous U.S. for having been popthe 1960s, after which they were outlawed. However, they are also believed to be useful for some medical and psychiatric treatments.

A May 2021 article in the National Library of Medicine says there has been a growing interest in using psilocybins to treat mood and anxiety disorders and alleviate pain. However, the drug remains illegal under federal law.

On Thursday, McMinnville-area farmer Jason Lampman spoke to commissioners for a second time, asking them not to send a measure to the ballot. Lampman argued that commissioners are worrying needlessly about the treatment centers, and said farmers need to be able to both grow the mushrooms, and host treatment facilities on their

He said he worries that a two-year moratorium would only give time for large out-of-state corporations to muscle their way in and establish themselves, pushing out small local businesses.

Lampman, who grows hemp, said a large cannabis company has already approached him about his property.

"A cannabis company offered me $750,000 for the land that I paid $200,000 for ... they wanted to pave the entire thing, turn it into a grow extraction thing with like 100 employees. I was like, my neighbors would never forgive me. And that's not what I want," he told commissioners.

He urged commissioners to simply let the new rules take place, without delay.

"I do feel denying service centers is basically denying access to a scientifically proven new best treatment for anxiety, depression and addiction, among other things," Lampman said. "I don't think normal, working class people are going to be able to access this service if it's not available in our county. There's three sessions, like I mentioned before ... Being able to take three days off work, I couldn't do it, I know that, so other people who, like, work, aren't going to be able to do that. I think the safest place to access the service is going to be near your home," he said.

Lampman has argued previously that the services will be expensive, and unlikely to be used by large numbers of people, which he said should alleviate some concerns. And he said the county is worrying over issues it already knows how to address, and that are not unique to psilocybins.

"I'm confused that this hypothetical situation I hear over and over again; it's like, 'is somebody going to go to an establishment, ingest an intoxicating substance, get in a car, and kill somebody.' That isn't hypothetical. cultures around the world, That's an actual news story but are best known in the from July News Register, from someone on alcohol. ular recreational drugs in That's real. That happened. And there has been nothing raised to put a pause, to wait until we figure out alcohol," Lampman said. "That doesn't make sense. It doesn't work. So, I just think, we want our businesses to thrive. Those are people doing things that are not right."

He argued that service treatment providers will have to invest a significant amount of their own money into obtaining training and licenses, and will therefore have a strong incentive to make sure they follow the

to accommodate and assist new, inexperienced clerks, and that he himself had no experience when he was first elected.

Commissioner Mary Starrett, who initially proposed retaining term limits for the Sheriff, noted that it is harder to win an election when running against an incumbent candidate.

The proposal sparked an outcry among voters, many of whom said they feared the commissioners would vote to end their own term limits, an action some said would be an abuse of power.

Commissioners said they had heard the message and were heeding it. The issue generated considerable public comment, with many people saying they supported removing the limits for the other offices, just not for commissioners. Others opposed removing any of the term limits, arguing that they allow for the county to regularly bring in new ideas.

The state Supreme Court has previously found term limits unconstitutional for county commissioners, specifically, so if a commissioner decides to challenge the limits in the future, the county will likely either lose in court, or decline to defend itself.

But Commissioners Casey Kulla, Lindsay Berschauer and Mary Starrett, who was elected in May to her third term in office, said the county ordinance would serve as a "policy statement" that the county believes commissioners should limit themselves to no more than three terms in office.

Humble Spirit Chef Brett Uniss discusses using meats and produce straight from the farm in the new Third Street restaurant. His menu includes trout, chicken, beef and pork from local sources.

Humble Spirit celebrates local food, community

By STARLA POINTER Of the News-Register

long-anticipated opening of Humble Spirit, Third Street's newest restaurant, has been going well, Chef Brett Uniss said.

Part of The Ground, a collection of local farms focusing on sustainable practices, Humble Spirit opened in mid-July at 411 N.E. Third St. Business has been good, the chef said.

The space, which previously held the 411 Eatery, has been remodeled to feature a light and airy dining room and a smaller room with seating at the bar or counter next to a window. Both rooms feature exposed brick walls, a natural stone bar and countertops, hardwood floors and plates and other accessories in mellow earth tones.

On a wall in the entranceway hang pieces of art honoring Rose Marie Caughran, longtime librarian and volunteer, and Cal Kearns, avid volunteer who started his family's C&D Landscaping business.

Both left positive marks on McMinnville, Uniss said. They are the first people to be recognized in what will be a changing display of "local humble spirits.'

'That's part of our philosophy of celebrating the local community," said the chef, who came to The Ground from the Duniway Hotel and Jackrabbit in Portland, where he was executive chef.

Before that, he worked in the Napa Valley with Étoile and The French Laundry; at Bouchon Bakery and other restaurants in New York; and in Las Vegas with B&B Ristorante at The Venetian Resort, Honey Salt and Andiron Steak & Sea.

Humble Spirit still is waiting to receive a few pieces of equipment, which have been delayed by supply chain issues, Uniss said. But because it partners with local farmers, he said the restaurant doesn't have a problem keeping a supply of fresh, carefully grown food for its snacks, small plates and dinners.

Produce may come from the McMinnville Farmers Market or directly from a nearby field, for instance. Beef, pork and eggs come from Tabula Rasa Farm or other local growers. Beer comes from local breweries Humble Spirit's bar area offers seating for those in wheelchairs, as well as conventional bar seats. The bar, adjacent to restaurant tables with a view of the kitchen, includes a wall of artwork honoring local "humble spirits" who made a difference in the community, such as the late Rose Marie Caughran.

Milk, too, is straight from the Schoch Dairy & Creamery in Helvetia; it's served as dessert with the kitchen's homemade chocolate sandwich cookies with a creamy filling made with local pork

As a result, the chef can tell diners the source of their meals, including the breed that contributed to the hamburger, beef and pork meatballs, or steak.

The latter is on the menu from time to time as one of the "farm cuts," along with chops and other prime parts of a grass-fed, well-loved Humble Spirit and The Ground are committed to using the entire animal, Uniss said, so the availability varies according to the butchering schedule. One steer will yield a certain number of prime cuts; the rest becomes high-quality ground beef.

"The more burgers I sell, the more steaks I can offer,' he said.

Uniss makes those burgers with two 3-ounce patties, smoked cheese and pickles on a brioche bun; served with fries, the price is $19, or $22 with the addition of a fried

Magical 'Night Out'

Above: Mark the Magician, aka Mark Siegel of Sheridan, completes another mystifying card trick at Carlton Night Out Tuesday, to the amazement of Victoria Ernst, left, city council member Shirley Ward-Mullins, and Christi Martinez, assistant city manager. The trio chose the three of hearts from an imaginary card deck and Siegel pulled out an actual deck from his pocket, promising that the one card turned opposite the other 51 would be their card, and up came the three of hearts. Watkins and Martinez were helping staff the city's table, Ernst is a candidate for State Representative Dist. 24, and Siegel, director of Delphian School for 48 years, has done roving magic at events such as Night Out for decades. County pair convicted of illegal guide activity

The News-Register staff

Two Yamhill County men have been convicted in Wallowa County Circuit Court of unlawful guiding activities that took place in the Hells Canyon National Recreation Area.

In August 2019, the Oregon State Police and United States Fish and Wildlife Service served search warrants in two Oregon counties and conducted simultaneous interviews in Michigan, Ohio and Oregon.

The warrants were served on Caleb L. Richmond, 48, of McMinnville, and David H. Ravia, 69, of Dayton.

Interviews and warrants stemmed from a twoyear investigation into 10 years of alleged unlawful guiding activities in Eastern Oregon's Wallowa County.

On Sept. 1, 2020, the Wallowa County Circuit Court issued search warrants for the arrest of Richmond and Ravia. On Nov. 6, 2020, Ravia was cited to appear, in lieu of custody, on eight counts of outfitting/guiding without a license. On Nov. 24, 2020, Richmond was cited on 12 counts for the same offense. On June 16, 2021, gov/osmb/

Richmond pleaded guilty to five counts of failure to register as an outfitter/guide. He was fined $350, ordered to pay $1,000 restitution to the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service, complete 80 hours of community service and issue a letter of apology to all guides and hunters. He will also serve four months of bench probation.

On April 6, Ravia pleaded guilty to three counts of failure to register as an outfitter/ guide. He was ordered to pay $1,000 restitution to the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service, complete 80 hours of community service and issue a letter of apology to all hunters and guides. He will also serve four months of bench probation, which includes a prohibition on guiding and hunting. He must forfeit all evidence seized, including pack bags, a chainsaw, saddle, elk calls and six mules.

To report any illegal guiding activity, contact the OSP Hotline: Dial 1-800-452-7888 or *OSP (*677) from a mobile phone; email: TIP@osp.oregon. gov or file a complaint electronically at oregon.

'Crush' seeks children's artwork

The News-Register staff

Plenty of summertime examples of young people's talents can be found around the county. One example is the animal, art, horticulture and other exhibits and competition at this week's County Fair.

Another is Lemonade Day, coming Aug. 20, in which hundreds of kids will create one-day lemonade stand businesses throughout McMinnville, coordinated by Chamber of Commerce.

An upcoming opportunity for young artists comes from Visit McMinnville and its new Crush publication. Kids 12 and under are encouraged to submit artwork for consideration for the October "episode" of Crush, a monthly that debuted in April.

Submissions are welcome in any medium, and should be 6-by-6 inches and fit any of the following themes: Halloween, autumn, or Hispanic Heritage Month.

Send submissions to Crush@visitmcminnville. com by Aug. 26; the winner will be notified Aug. 29.

Arna and his wife, Maria Valdivia, opened El Sabor de Jalisco a few months ago at 2147 N.E. Cumulus Ave., McMinnville. The black food trailer sits next to the hydroponic plant growing store and a Pacific Pride gas station on the access road on the north side of Three Mile Lane.

It might be easier to find if you use your nose: Most days, Arna fires up his grill to cook steak and other meats for his combination plates, burritos, tacos and other dishes.

He's used the grill sparingly this week because of the extreme temperatures. But El Sabor de Jalisco has still offered its full menu, which includes creamy Peruano beans, rice and fresh tortillas prepared by Maria.

"Nobody touches her kitchen but her," he said, "and nobody touches my grill but me.'

The couple, who've been together for 28 years, came to McMinnville four years ago from Tennessee. Arna had worked construction there, and found construction and excavating jobs in the Willamette Valley.

But after a job building Wilsonville's new water treatment plant ended last fall, he decided to make a profession out of something he'd been doing since he was a teen: cooking.

"Mom taught me to cook," he said. "If I had a question or a problem, I'd ask her and

He's currently working without eggs, for instance, and made "super nachos" to fulfill a request by frying some of the chopped tortillas until crispy, then topping them with smoky steak and other ingredients.

Making food from scratch is also the tradition in Jalisco, known for its unique food, culture and fields of blue agave, the plant grown for making tequila. For more than 200 years, the state has been known as the only place agave grows well, he said; in the dry season, you can look out over "a blue ocean" of the spiky plants.

"Agave is blue gold," he said. "Tequila is the heart, the blood of Jalisco."

Arna also keeps to traditional serving methods.

For instance, he purchased special clay platters for customers who order a dish featuring steak marinated overnight in pineapple juice to eat under his shady awning.

Arna said the meat must be arranged on one side of the plate, with whole beans on the other and sauteed onions and peppers on either side. Serving the Jalisco speciality on styrofoam just wasn't right, he said.

And he uses plastic bags for serving a traditional sourdough bread soaked in tomato sauce along with carnitas, beans and rice. That makes it easy to eat without getting hot peppers on your hands, then possibly in your eyes, he said.

"I love all my customers," Arna said.

As if to prove his point on the day of the interview. Stuart Nelson arrived to order lunch, as he does two or three times a week. Nelson was El Sabor de Jalisco's very first customer.

"It's so good," he said, nodding toward Arna. "He of the house and weaponry was being discharged, much of it through the front door of the home, according to Elliott.

"Earlier in the day, prior to law enforcement's arrival, another individual had been in the home, but that individual left before law enforcement arrived," Elliott said. He would not identify that person. "There was nobody else in the home when the event was occurring."

One neighbor, Jerry Hubbard, said, "We heard a boom, went on the deck and there were more explosions. Then there was a round of shots. And more fireworks, explosions. Pretty soon, the police had all the streets blocked off. I heard more muffled shots. And another magazine went off. And a third one. That was really loud.'

Hubbard shared with the News-Register a photo he took of an adult male climbing out of an upstairs window, dressed only in underwear, and onto a small overhanging roof on the rear of the house. Elliott confirmed the photo was of Cashman, who went in and out of the house through various doors and windows multiple times during the duration of the incident.

was arraigned in Circuit Court Monday afternoon on charges that include 10 felony offenses; bail was set at $500,000 and he was instructed by Judge Jennifer Chapman not to discuss any aspects of the case, which included anything that precipitated his outburst.

'There's a domestic violence component to everything that occurred," said Elliott, who confirmed there has been "no connection drawn" between this event and two recent incidents involving what appeared to be homemade explosive devices.

The first occurred about 3:15 a.m. Sunday, July 24, in the southwest part of town. At that time, an explosive device was tossed out of a moving vehicle and subsequently exploded, causing damage to some nearby vehicles and a residence. No one was injured.

The second incident occurred two days later when an unexploded device was found in the driveway of a residence in the northwest part of town.

"Mr. Cashman only had fireworks (mortars), not any sort of improvised explosive devices, so it doesn't match the prior incidents in that respect," Elliott said.

McMinnville Police Chief Matt Scales said his schedule did not enable him to immediately respond to the scene Saturday, and about the time he did, Washington County Tactical Negotiations Team members were arriving.

Scales said he immediate-The 32-year-old Cashman ly thought of the officers who had responded, those who were en route and residents in the neighborhood where the incident was occurring.

In addition to the McMin-

Dispatcher Karen' Ann Williams talks to Carlton Night Out attendees in Ladd Park Tuesday about signing up for reverse 911 service, in which county residents can receive a text, email or phone alert from Yamhill County Communications in case of a fire, criminal incident, or other emergency. Darci Ancalade, dispatch manager, said, "We are getting a lot of interest because Saturday is so fresh in peoples' minds," referring to the July 30 firearms incident in west McMinnville.

nville Police, Yamhill County Sheriff's Office and Washington County TNT, the Newberg-Dundee Police, Oregon State Police and District Attorney Brad Berry's office participated throughout the incident.

Scales called the Washington County TNT an "incredible asset" to have available for an incident of this magnitude.

"We do not have that type of resource, and their willingness to step into that void, it goes without saying that we owe them a great deal on this one," Scales said.

He emphasized that law enforcement's initial objective was to "contain the problem." While local officers train in the event of an active threat situation, they do not necessarily train with such a "massive complex incident" in mind, according to the chief.

Officers reverted to past training as they dealt with the situation, with a goal of not allowing it to evolve into a long-term, moving event.

Scales said he expects there to be some debriefing among agencies on an individual basis and as a whole so their response and how it was handled can be discussed and dissected in detail.

He said Yamhill County Emergency Alerts, a by-product of the county's Emergency Management program, should not go unnoticed. Sheriff's Sgt. Brian Young is the Emergency Manager Director.

Residents who live in the immediate area of the incident, and who are signed up to receive emergency alerts via various means — email, phone, text or the Everbridge software app on their phone, for example — received the following message Saturday morning, according to Young.

"McMinnville Police dealing with an active threat situation in the 100 block of Mt. Mazama Street. Shelter in place. Lock doors and remain inside.'

There are 19,518 McMinnville citizens who have signed up, and that could include more than one individual in a household.

This incident resulted in 1,919 citizens being contacted with the message. Of that number, 573 confirmed they were contacted and said they received the message. There were 1,084 who did not confirm. Of those 1,919 residents who were contacted, 242 were what Young described as "unreachable." Maybe they had an old landline on record that no longer was in service, he said. Twenty citizens were late confirmers.

"I would encourage everyone within a single household to create their own profile and register for Yamhill County Alerts," Young said. "Not everyone may be together at the same time when an alert is sent out. And we don't send out a lot of messages.'

To register, visit the Yamhill County Emergency Management website at co.yamhill.or.us/emergency-management.

Hubbard and his wife, Ann, who live on Mt. Ashland Lane, are signed up for Yamhill County Alerts.

They lived on the south side of Chicago, Illinois, for 18 years before moving to Sunriver in Central Oregon and just settled into their current residence in late February of this year.

The occupant of the house, who the couple said they did not know, hung a black flag out of an upstairs window. It had white lettering that read, "don't tread on me."

Hubbard said that only houses on Mt. Mazama Street were damaged by gunfire during the incident. The couple stayed safe in their home, texting others while the drama was unfolding.

The Yamhill County Fairgrounds hosted Bullmania Wednesday night as a part of its annual rodeo festivities. Riders were tasked with staying on for eight seconds, and only two of the 21 participants were able to meet the time limit. Mason Cooley of Prineville, pictured in the left and top images, took home the prize for the best ride. Cooley, atop Devil's Candy, scored 75 points on his first ride of the evening. He earned $2,400 in prize money for his efforts. His driving partner, Greg Shannon, also of Prineville, scored 68 points on his last attempt to take second place and earn $1,600.

Runners take on Mac's Restore Life 8K/5K

The inaugural Restore Life 8K and 5K City Race and Community Breakfast took place last weekend in McMinnville. Organized by Sunrise Church, the event raised funds for Mission of Yamhill County, a non-profit offering food and shelter on northeast Logan Street.

Nineteen runners participated in the 8K competition. "It was a wonderful event," said organizer Ken McChesney.

The top time in the 8K race was Cam McChesney, who clocked in at 30 minutes, 41.45 seconds. Cam's sister, Madison, won the women's division with a time of 41:42.14.

Russell Weaver, Mac High's former cross country coach, captured first place in his age category. He crossed the finish line in 33:54.85 for the second best time of the race.

In the 13 and under category, brothers Emmanuel and Gideon Broussard placed first and second in 47:59.30 and 52:10.42, respectively.

Complete results are as follows: Cam McChesney (30:41.45), Russell Weaver (33:54.85), Eric Mis (39:07.70), Ericson Teller (41:26.77), Madison McChesney (41:42.14), James Klein (41:53.42), Lydia Rozanski (44:22.67), Brian Delk (44:58.83), Carol Howell (46:36.49), Jason Bowie (47:01.80), Deanne Rozanski (47:58.86), Emmanuel Broussard (47:59.30), Aimie Broussard (48:32.39), Kirsten Rademacher (48:41.83), Eli Rademacher (48:42.80), Gideon Broussard (52:10.42), Quinton Nice (52:42.42), Richard Delk (57:51.42) and Jerome Tellio (1:02:51.42).

As the day and heat pressed on and three holes remained, my three faithful companions voted to return to the clubhouse. Before parting, I honestly told them how much they improved. They thanked me for my coaching.

After four-putting on my third-to-last hole – again, I'm not very good – the group in front of me excitedly asked me to join them in finishing the tournament. "You get to hit each shot four times!" they enthusiastically reminded me. The blisters on my hand told me to play simply as Logan, rather than a team of four.

In the brief time with my new group, encouragement and camaraderie again became common themes. The entire tournament proved not only a competition, but an event of fun.

I'd happily do it again.

Campuzano's connection with former Amity standouts goes beyond his prior experience with Hubbard. Mike Berkey, a 2001 graduate, has joined Campuzano's coaching staff as his offensive coordinator.

The first-year head coach is also eager to work with new athletic director Natachi Haarsma, another former standout Amity athlete.

"We were a part of an era where there was so much positivity. We performed really well and at the same time created bonds and memories that have drawn us back here," observed Campuzano.

Reflecting on his role in continuing Amity's success on the gridiron, Campuzano said, "If there was one program I wanted to coach, it was Amity. This is my town. It's a historic football Former Amity football standout Baltazar Campuzano has been hired as the Warriors' new head coach for the upcoming fall season. A 2003 graduate, Campuzano helped lead the Warriors to multiple state titles in the early 2000s. Prior to his role with Amity, Campuzano coached at Blanchet Catholic for nine years.

Of the News-Register AMITY - fter 19 years, former all-state running back and linebacker Baltazar Campuzano returns to the Amity football program. The Warriors' new head coach was a vital player during the team's unrivaled run of state titles in the early 2000s.

Now, Campuzano is set to lead the Warriors onto the field which made him a legend in the town's athletic community.

"I've always planned this," said Campuzano. "When I first started coaching football I knew I wanted to return someday."

He added, "This is special for me. It's still kind of surreal. At the same time, the season is almost upon us, so I have to make the surreal be real." Campuzano replaces longtime head coach Joel Magill, who won 105 games and two state championships across 13 seasons.

Asked about the upcoming season, Campuzano made one guarantee: the Warriors will compete.

"The most important thing for me is to create a positive experience for the kids," said Campuzano. "If I'm successful, it means I've convinced the kids to show up and compete. It doesn't necessarily mean we will win, but we will show up on Monday, Tuesday or Friday and compete. "That's the pressure I feel," he added.

Schematically, Campuzano is obviously familiar with the Warriors' Wing-T offense. He credited the community's middle school and peewee football programs for preparing students for high school competition, and youth coaches do an excellent job teaching the system, he

Amity Track competes at Junior National Championships; Vrell earns All-America in javelin

The News-Register staff

SACRAMENTO - Six members of the Amity Track Club recently competed at the USATF Junior Olympic National Championships July 25-31 in Sacramento. Every Warrior who traveled to the Golden State finished with at least a top-40 placing in their respective event.

Amity was led by the performance of sophomore javelin thrower Kiyan Vrell. Vrell, who won the Region 13 Championships in early July with a personal best of 146 feet, 4.25 inches, nearly matched his PR at nationals.

With a throw of 143'6.75", Vrell captured sixth place and earned All-America selection. He's the first Amity Track Club athlete to achieve Al-America hon-

Nick Hermens and Bo Sims, a pair of first-year Warrior hammer throwers, competed in the 15-16 year-old division. The two teammates placed 12th and 13th, respectively, with personal bests of 111'8.25" and 101'9.25". Both athletes hope to contend again next year when the National Championships are held at Hayward Field in Eugene.

Dawnica Brace, who placed first at the Oregon Association Championships in June and second at the Region 13 Championships, threw the turbo javelin at nationals. She garnered 29th place in her age group (9-10() with a mark of 42'3".

Adopting a Mustang is a challenging — and immensely rewarding — endeavor ild horses and burros are America's Western icon, and they are currently filling federal holding corrals by the thousands.

These holding corrals have been operated and maintained by the federal Bureau of Land Management since 1971, when Congress passed the Wild and Free-Roaming Horse and Burro Act. The act authorized protection of these animals and public adoption of them from holding corrals

The horses, commonly known under the breed name Mustang, are rounded up in groups during what is know as "herd gathers." The same is true of the burros.

They are removed from tracts of natural range when it reaches its maximum carrying capacity.

When herds grow large, they degrade the quality of the vegetation, diminish the availability of water and reduce the overall health of the population. Carrying capacities are established for various habitat based on how many individuals its resources can sustainably support.

Between the grazing of horses and other ungulates, resources are scarce on the dry rangelands of the West.

Wild horses and burros are protected from lethal population control under the act, so the federal government opted to herd excess animals into holding corrals. There, they receive quality food and care until they can be adopted out.

This is an ideal temporary solution for wild horse and burro population control. But the cost of care is becoming an increasing burden.

In March 2020, the BLM estimated 95,000 wild horses and burros were running free on public lands and 50,000 were awaiting adoption in off-range corrals across the country.

In effort to reduce the number being retained in corrals, horse trainers from all over have agreed to adopt animals, gentle them to various levels and place them in forever homes.

This is where people like me come into play.

I was raised with domestic horses in my barn. But I didn't stumble into the uniqueness of wild horses until six years ago.

Since then, I have worked with many Mustangs — a name derived from the Spanish "mesteño" or "monstenco" for wild or stray. And I have made a dedicated effort to inform those around me of the exceptional nature that defines these creatures.

The notion of giving these animals a better life, a life outside of federal holding pens, resonates with me.

The Mustangs I adopt from BLM corrals are completely wild. The process of gaining their trust takes time, but with patience and understanding, a special bond gradually develops.

This process is rewarding, but it can also be challenging. It is defined by successes and failures that develop one's horsemanship and identify ways each animal is unique.

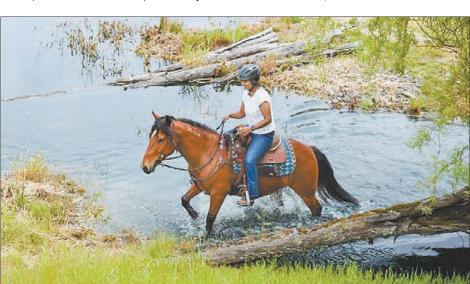

Each horse and burro has its own physical attributes, disposition and identifying marking — a freeze mark brand on the left side of the neck.

The brand starts with a symbol representing "U," which stands for the U.S. government, followed by symbols for the last two digits of the year the animal was born. Next come symbols for the six digits of the animal's unique registration number.

A guide called the Alpha Angle Symbol Key is used to decipher the symbols. Most Mustang and burro owners love showing off their animal's freeze mark brand, as a way of sharing with others that their animal was once wild but is now a very treasured individual.

Barbaric death penalty lacks meaningful purpose

By LAURA FINLEYOf Barry University

There is no doubt about Nikolas Cruz's culpability for the mass murder of 17 people and the injury of 17 others at Florida's Marjory Stoneman Douglas High School on February 14, 2018.

His horrific actions affected many more than those who were injured or killed and will leave a lifetime scar on far too many people. He absolutely must be held accountable for this tragedy.

The death penalty, however, is the wrong way to do so, for several reasons.

Cruz pleaded guilty. Thus, his sentencing could have moved on quickly, assuring he was never released from prison.

Instead, prosecutors decided to seek the death penalty, resulting in months of delays and deep trauma to the victims' families. This is always the case when the death penalty is on the table, and in this situation, like so many, the families were split on their preferred outcome.

My experience as a criminology professor persuades me the trauma of this kind of sentencing hearing far outweighs any benefit.

I have never endured it in person, but my daughter did in the Cruz case, through her role as an intern in the Broward County Defense Attorney's Office. She said it was horrific to sit through, and expressed special empathy for the family members, many of whom were visibly breaking down in the courtroom.

So, why? If Cruz could be held accountable for the rest of his life without this additional trauma, why seek the death penalty at all?

The prosecutors made that perfectly clear — so that execution would remain an option in Florida. If they didn't seek capital charges in a case like this one, they reasoned, they'd have a hard time ever doing so in future.

Not even Supreme Court can save Big Coal's eclipse in U.S.

By REBECCA DAVIS

Of Stephen F. Austin State University

The U.S. coal industry chalked up a rare win this summer, when the U.S. Supreme Court issued a ruling limiting the government's ability to regulate greenhouse gas emissions from power plants. But that doesn't mean coal-fired power plants are poised for a comeback.

As an economist, I analyze the coal industry, including power plant construction and retirement plans. I see three main reasons U.S. coal plants will continue to close down.

A detail related to the Supreme Court case helps tell the story.

The case, West Virginia v. the Environmental Protection Agency, involved the Clean Power Plan, a set of Obama-era regulations proposed in 2015 that would have required power plants to make deep cuts in greenhouse gas emissions.

For those powered by coal — historically the dominant source of carbon dioxide emissions in the electricity sector — that likely would have meant doing away with coal altogether.

But the Clean Power Plan never went into effect, and coal use has declined so much anyway that the U.S. power sector has already met the plan's 2030 target — eight years early.

At its peak in 2007, coal was responsible for almost 2 trillion kilowatt-hours of electricity generation in the U.S., enough to power 186 million homes. By 2021, that total had dropped 55%.

Local efforts may not solve homelessness, but they help

The three candidates for Oregon governor season with a debate hosted by the Oregon Newspaper Publishers Association.

On the issue of homelessness, they hit all the talking points.

They each touted projects they had worked on. Republican Christine Drazan discussed her work on launching Second Home, which focuses on finding stable living situations for homeless youth. Non-affiliated candidate Betsy Johnson recounted her support for the repurposing of the former Wapato Jail in Portland into a place of "recovery and reentry into society." And Democrat Tina Kotek advocated for ongoing funding for Project Turnkey, which turns motels into transitional shelters (with one here in McMinnville).

They promised, if elected, to move people from the streets to organized housing with access to wrap-around services (Kotek); bring together public safety agencies, mental health experts, and others, "rather than working in silos" (Johnson); and replace partisan politicians with compassion and culpability, and seek out "community-based solutions on the ground" (Drazan).

The issue of homelessness will be front and center in the coming weeks leading up to election day on Nov. 8, as candidates at the state, county and city levels will present plenty of platitudes and heartfelt calls for action.

While you won't likely hear a candidate last week kicked off the general election say it, the fact is no one leader or group knows the solution. They know by now that broad plans to end homelessness within a certain time frame fall on deaf ears, as such campaigns have failed in the past. The more realistic approach is to seek out and celebrate small victories, and continuously shoot for small reductions in the unhoused population. There are many ways to help homeless people without trying to solve homelessness.

> Residents' intolerance for the homeless crisis peaks when it's most present in view, as it is this election season.

> In 2019, McMinnville officials launched a large-scale cleanup of curbside camps and run-down RVs parking on the street, following months of outcry from residents. The presence of visibly homeless has slowly yet surely regained the ire of local residents, who wish to take their kids to local parks without having to navigate around broken down vehicles and mounds

> The city is again launching an effort to curb the problem areas. Having secured a lot to store illegally parked vehicles, Mac Police is set to begin warning people permanently parked on the streets to vacate, or have their vehicles towed. Chief Matt Scales told city councilors last week that several weeks of outreach will precede any action, so those living in vehicles understand the options available to them.

this activity to continue.

McMinnville is not short on compassion, proven by the neverending efforts of local organizations that work daily to direct the unhoused population to the services it needs. But lines need to be drawn. It was disheartening to learn of disturbing acts by unhoused people, told to councilors by leaders of Juliette's House, the city's child abuse intervention center. People seeking out services at the facility deserve a safe environment. As the council heard, nearby campers' aggressive behavior has denied that on multiple occasions.

The forthcoming effort to clean up the problem areas won't offer much solution to the issue of homelessness overall. There is no quick fix to many causes for people living on the streets, including drug addiction, ongoing mental health crisis, economic rollercoasters and an insufficient supply of affordable housing.

The governor candidates acknowledged that multiple models exist for addressing homelessness, but the air of disagreement among them prevails. While the candidates for governor and other state and federal offices continue to debate it this election season, it remains that local government and its partners are the ones that must deal with the problem on the ground.

No one should wait for some trickledown of common sense on the topic, but perhaps one outcome of the candidates' vigorous debate will be, finally, to crystallize local collaboration on solutions that make sense and make a difference.

Death

That justification is troubling on so many levels.

First, the idea that the death penalty "must" remain on the table is antiquated. Twenty-three states have abolished the death penalty and three more are under gubernatorial moratoriums.

Surveys in Florida have found that more than 60 percent of people favor life in prison without parole over the death penalty for convicted murderers. The more recent cost study found that seeking the death penalty instead of natural life costs more than $51 million a year in Florida — nearly $1 million per week.

In the Cruz case, there were no trial costs because he pleaded guilty. That means all costs the state is incurring by seeking the death penalty are entirely unnecessary.

It is far past time that the death penalty be eliminated entirely in the US. Even in cases as horrific as this one, it is simply an antiquated and barbaric practice that does nothing to keep us safe, deter crime or heal those who have lost loved ones.

Coal

The drop was due in large part to an industrywide shift from coal to gas, solar and wind. That shift is happening for three main reasons.

1. Natural gas supply and pricing

Natural gas prices have decreased significantly — more than 60% between 2003 and 2019. That's mainly due to improvements in hydraulic fracturing and horizontal drilling, which serve to allow drillers to extract more gas from shale.

The increased supply and decreased cost have led to substantial construction of new state-of-the-art, high-efficiency gas-fired generators.

In addition to being cheaper and more efficient, they are able to come online at full power in one to 12 hours, while a coalfired generator may take up to 24 hours to begin producing power. The long lead time makes it hard to rely on coal when rising demand means the power grid needs more electricity quickly.

The electrical system faces its highest demand between 7 a.m. and 11 p.m. weekdays. If demand spikes, a coal-fired generator will miss that window, where gas will not.

2. The rise of renewable

Solar and wind energy are now cost competitive with fossil-fueled power, thanks to technological advancements.

In addition, the federal government and many state governments are offering incentives for renewable energy production, which lowers the cost.

President Joe Biden's climate plan aims to increase those incentives. And, once built, renewable energy sources have no fuel costs and relatively low operational costs, compared with coal-fired generators.

Solar energy accounts for 46% of all new electricity generating capacity expected to join the grid in 2022, about 21.5 gigawatts.

A record 17.1 gigawatts of wind capacity came online in the U.S. last year, after a tax incentive was extended, and another 7.6 gigawatts is expected this

3. Environmental regulation

The government has instituted several environmental regulations over the past few decades aimed at reducing sulfur dioxide, nitrogen oxides, particulate matter, mercury and other hazardous air pollutants emitted by the electric power sector.

These hazardous emissions are linked to health problems, including respiratory illnesses and neurological and developmental damage, as well as smog, acid rain and climate change. And according to the U.S. Government Accountability Office, coal-fired generators are by far the largest sources of damaging emissions in the electricity sector.

To comply with the regulations, coal-powered plants have had to install scrubbers to remove the pollutants from their emissions, switch to lower-sulfur coal and invest in the reduction of sulfur and other impurities. As a result, costs have increased for the coal-fired fleet.

These higher environmental mitigation costs, coupled with lower wholesale electricity prices over recent years, make it harder for the operators of such plants to recover the capital investment needed to maintain an aging set of coal-fired generators. As a result, such units are increasingly being retired.

So what does this mean for the future of coal power in the U.S.?

The U.S. Energy Information Administration reports that coal generators account for 85% of the electric generating capacity being retired this year nationwide.

This trend is expected to continue, with substantial coal generator retirements occurring by 2030. This is a result of both market factors — cheap natural gas and affordable renewable energy — and regulatory measures.

Coal is used more widely in other countries, including China. As a result, U.S. coal companies have increased their exports in recent years.

However, at the 2021 United Nations climate change conference, more than 40 countries committed to completely shifting away from coal, and 20 others, including the U.S., pledged to stop government financing of coal use, unless it includes carbon capture technology.

The Biden administration, which has struggled to get its climate policies through a deeply divided Congress, appeared to have movement on a large climate change package in late July. An agreement announced by Sen. Joe Manchin of West Virginia, a major coal-producing state, included support for renewable energy and electric vehicles.

Meanwhile, the administration is weighing new regulatory options that could further affect the cost of generating electricity with coal. And this all adds up to a difficult economic environment for coal-fired generation in the U.S. for the foreseeable future

Too many jobs for too few candidates

America's nationwide workforce crisis has triggered a mass waiting game.

Businesses and institutions are challenged by the inability to find qualified employees to fill key positions. As a result, people are waiting in lines, on the phone and on e-mail for services that once were more readily available.

Getting common transaction information today is akin to calling the IRS in years past. And who knows how long the IRS line is today?

Jeb Bladine is

publisher of the News-Register.

This from the U.S. Bureau of Labor: "On the last business day of March 2022, there were 11.5 million job openings and 6.0 million unemployed people ... a ratio of unemployed people to job openings of 0.5 for March.'

Putting that into perspective: The historic average is 2.7 unemployed people for each job opening.

That number peaked at 6.4 in July 2009, dropped to 1.4 in February 2016, and ranged from 0.8 to 1.0 through 2018 and the ensuing pandemic years. The March 0.5 ratio is the lowest ever recorded.

Causes of this worker shortage are many and diverse.

One factor, says the U.S. Chamber of Commerce, is our world's-highest incarceration rate, mostly men of prime working age.

"Nearly 2 million Americans are incarcerated in the U.S. correctional system, with an additional 4.5 million on probation or on parole at any time," the Chamber reports. And another 77 million Americans with criminal records often are excluded from employment opportunities.

CNBC finance reporter Greg Iacurci cites these reasons for people not returning to the workforce:

COVID and fear of contracting COVID, early retirement secured by Social Security and personal nest eggs, care responsibilities for children or elderly relatives, people with amassed savings choosing to take time off, and wages not meeting worker needs, often due to health risks and child care needs.

About that mass waiting game: In just the past week, I have waited 105 minutes on hold for a hospitality industry agent and 45 minutes for airline information; found reserved lodging unavailable "because house-keeping went home"; waited almost 20 minutes on hold for a medical clinic before being forced into voicemail and triggering the dreaded game of call-back phone tag.

Answering systems plead with callers to get information online and avoid phone system gridlock — good advice when compared to telephone wait times. Simply stated, operations lack sufficient staff and can't find replacements from a much-reduced workforce.

One side note: Whenever I got through, I invariably had great service from people. However, these days, getting there is far more than half the journey.

Windows, not walls

Words matter.

What an obvious, banal observation! Who doesn't know that "I love you" and "I hate you" and all the creative racial epithets ever invented really matter to those to whom they are directed.

But what about other words — words we use and hear every day without giving any real thought as to what they mean?

The word that is troubling me lately is "fight." It seems to me that every political candidate representing every political party this election season is pledging to fight about - well everything.

Fight for you. Fight against you. Fight for this right. Fight against that right. Fight, Fight. Fight.

It's no wonder our government accomplishes nothing when everyone in it is fighting with everyone else about everything.

How refreshing it would be to hear candidates tell us how they plan to work across the aisle, listen to all points of view, seek common ground and compromise (yikes!) to get the people's work done.

The more we fight, the more we promise to fight, the more we brag about fighting, the farther apart we become — as individuals and as a nation.

Of course, there many different visions of what America is and what it should be.

If only we would allow our visions for this nation to be windows and not walls, to see and hear one another and fight only for understanding and the common good.

If only.

Erma Vasquez McMinnville

Great travesty

A great travesty is being perpetrated in our nation by our own government and the world elites.

Public-private partnerships and investment under environmental, social and governance guidance are responsible for our high gas prices, supply chain shortages and lack of fertilizer for farming.

We must also consider the encouraging of electronic money for convenience and safety. Some convenience there may be, but not safety.

The system has been hacked. Does it benefit only those who control it?

A serious violation occurred when Congress ignored President Jefferson's warnings and created an independent central bank, forerunner of today's Federal Reserve System. The coining of our money has been turned over to a corporation, and we are in great debt

In effect, you are not in control of your own money. You can't use it with a flip of the switch.

An inroad has been gained by dividing our nation to hide the true agenda. It's time to wake up, drop the axes, converse, research, seek the truth and pledge resistance.

We have a duty to our nation to see it is governed constitutionally, but we've been manipulated and deceived. We've abandoned our duty and will pay dearly if we don't wake up.

ROHSE COLORED GLASSES

Trees just keep giving

A few days ago I glanced at the calendar and realized Thanksgiving and Christmas were going to be here before I knew it.

Elaine Rohse is fascinated by words, books and writing For – and spends Thanksgivmuch time ing, I like sating that to get my fascination. thank yous lined up so I don't forget important ones, although I always start with the same ones every year: thanks for God, family, friends and the United States of America.

This year I'm adding two important ones: thanks for paper and trees.

With regard to paper, I can't imagine what our world would be without paper: No paper for newspapers, magazines, books? No paper for shopping lists? No paper for our To Do lists, even if we don't get any scratched off after having done them? And what would little boys do without big pencil tablets in which they draw everything that has wheels?

I love trees. Thus, I have a guilty conscience about all the trees I have massacred because of wasted paper.

That guilt goes back to high school typing class. I liked that class, but I liked to try to type faster — faster than my hands would go. And I liked vigorously slamming the carriage on those sturdy upright Underwoods.

At the start of every class, our teacher, Mrs. Canova, had us warm up on "asdf's." I'd roll in a new sheet of typing paper and usually before I was halfway through the first line, I'd made a mistake.

Mrs. Canova wouldn't permit us to turn in a typing lesson that had errors. She would have turned pale at the thought of a bottle of white-out in the desk of any student in her class something that might have enabled us to get a few errors past her eagle eye. I'd impatiently snatch that imperfect start out of the machine and throw it in the waste basket: another tree on the way to being massacred.

Typewriters in our school were manual models. That was during the Depression. and ours was cattle-ranching country, where ranchers couldn't remember a year that cattle prices weren't down at shipping time.

When I began thinking about giving thanks to the trees, I was a bit surprised to learn that there is a list of the ten most famous trees in the world. And I found I'd met one. General Sherman, when we visited Sequoia National Park a few months ago.

Oregon has wonderful trees, many of them. But none that are on the most famous list.

In a way, these trees for which I'll be giving thanks are a little like Santa Claus, who never stops giving. And that brings to mind a troubling thought:

What would happen to our world if Santa came down with a severe case of virus on Christmas Eve? Our trees know well who could fill in for Santa: They Additionally, trees serve around the clock as housekeepers for the world. They probably even sweep under your bed.

In one year, an acre of mature trees absorbs the same amount of carbon dioxide you would release if you drove your car 26,000 miles.

Trees provide a home for birds and small animals, and can be an aid to healing. Researchers claim that patients in hospital rooms with a view of trees have fewer complications and heal more quickly.

I do not know to whom I should address my next Thanksgiving tribute. I want this thank you to go to those who are responsible for providing us with books with pages printed on both sides.

Thank you, whoever you are, for book pages printed on both sides. The trees thank you, too.

The good news is that no one actually knows how many trees are in the world.

It is believed there may be species not yet discovered. And who knows what these new species will have for us? It may be like Christmas Present count shows South America accounts for 43% of the earth's tree cover and North America 15%.

There is some encouraging news, because the number of trees massacred by humans has not been as great as anticipated by some, thanks to recycling, replanting, education about how to protect our trees from fire — by, for example, wrapping a tree with foil if fire is threatening.

What nice Christmas presents you may find under your tree — or, in some cases, get from a tree. Take the henna tattoo.

The henna tree is enjoying some popularity of late because a henna tattoo is less permanent than injected ink tattoo.

If you decide to get a henna tattoo, though, be sure to do a skin test first. Some people have considerable reaction.

Many people are learning how to do their own henna tattoo. And they can be beautiful.

Thanksgiving will be here before you know it. Don't forget to thank the trees and that wonderful paper.

SAVVY SENIOR

Paying for long-term care without insurance or savings

Dear Savvy Senior:

What types of financial resources are available to help seniors pay for longterm care? My 86-yearold mother will need either an assisted living facility or nursing home care in the near future, but she doesn't have long-term care insurance and her savings are minimal.

Searching Daughter

The cost of assisted living and nursing home care in the U.S is very expensive. According to the Genworth cost of care survey tool, the national median cost for an assisted living facility today is over $4,600 per month, while nursing home care runs more than $8,100 per month for a semi-private room. (See Genworth.com/aging-andyou/finances/cost-of-care. html to look up costs in your area.)

Most people pay for long-term care (LTC) – which encompasses assisted living, nursing home and in-home care - with either personal funds, government programs or insurance. But if your mom is lacking in savings and has no LTC insurance to cover her costs, here are your best options to look for funding.

Medicaid (not Medicare): The first thing you need to know is that Medicare (the government health insurance program for seniors 65 and older and those with disabilities) does not cover long-term care. It only provides limited short-term coverage, up to 100 days for skilled nursing or rehabilitation services after a three-day hospital stay.

Medicaid, however, (the joint federal and state program that covers health care for the poor) does cover nursing home and in-home care. But to be eligible for coverage, your mother must be very low-income. Her countable assets can't be more than around $2,000, including investments. (Note that most people who enter a nursing home don't qualify for Medicaid at first but pay for care out-of-pocket until they deplete their savings enough to qualify.)

There are also many states that now have Medicaid waver programs that can help pay for assisted living. To get more information on Medicaid coverage and eligibility, call your state Medicaid office (see Medicaid.gov). You can also check your mom's Medicaid eligibility at MedicaidPlanningAssistance.org

Veterans benefits: If your mom is a wartime veteran, or a spouse or surviving spouse of a wartime veteran, there is a benefit called Aid and Attendance that can help pay toward her long-term care. To be eligible, your mom must need assistance with daily living activities like bathing, dressing or going to the bathroom. And her yearly income must be under $15,816 as a surviving spouse, or $24,610 for a single veteran — after her medical and long-term care expenses. Her assets must also be less than $138,489 excluding her home and car.

To learn more, see VA.gov/geriatrics, or contact your regional VA office, or your local veterans service organization. Call 800-827-1000 for contact information.

Life insurance: If your mom has a life insurance policy, find out if it offers an accelerated death benefit that would allow her to get a tax-free advance to help pay for her care.

Or consider selling her policy to a life settlement company. These are companies that buy life insurance policies for cash, continue to pay the premiums and collect the death benefit when she dies. Most sellers generally get four to eight times more than the policy cash surrender value.

If she owns a policy with a face value of $100,000 or more and is interested in this option, get quotes from several brokers or life settlement providers. To locate some, use the Life Insurance Settlement Association member directory at LISA.org

To look for these and other programs in your area that can help pay your mom's long-term care, go to PayingForSeniorCare. com and click on "Find Financial Assistance for Care.'
